Ousted President Manuel Zelaya headed toward Honduras on Thursday in a new attempt to retake power and overturn a military coup that has become Central America's biggest political crisis in two decades. Wearing his trademark cowboy hat, the leftist leader mounted a jeep in the Nicaraguan capital Managua and headed north for the Honduran border followed by a convoy of supporters and journalists.

Leader: African Women should be Educated, Take the Positions They Deserve

Banjul- Speaking to women in Gambia during his visit this African country last week, the Leader of the Revolution Muammar Al-Qathafi said women should be equal in rights but not in duties. At this juncture, he stressed that African women should be educated and take the positions they deserve. He told the meeting that he was moved by the warm and hospitable reception accorded him and his delegation. Such a reception, he said, manifests the fact that the people in this country are happy and contented with the social, political, economic and security situation of The Gambia.

The leader told the large gathering of Gambian women that a woman should be educated to the extent that her services are needed by the government, the society, and the people in general. He praised

President Jammeh for his women's empowerment initiative, making reference to his appointment of women to top government decision-making positions such as the vice presidency. He noted that it is fortunate to have a leader in The Gambia like President Jammeh. "As a matter of fact, women should think above the men about the future of Africa," he told the meeting.

The Leader spoke at length
